INTRODUCTION

The following inventory of archaeological sites lists all sites present in the Ontario Archaeological Sites Database (OASDB) that are located within the City of Hamilton. These archaeological sites have been registered by avocational, professional, and academic archaeologists as part of their provincially-licensed archaeological survey work in Hamilton.

Archaeology has been defined as the systematic study of past humans by the recovery and examination of remaining material evidence, such as graves, tools, and settlements.

The Administration of Archeology in Ontario

Archaeology in Ontario is administered by the Ontario Ministry of Culture (OMC), as mandated through the Ontario Heritage Act. The Ministry is responsible for:

- licensing archaeologists to conduct archaeology;
- reviewing reports on work carried out under these licenses; and
- maintaining a database of files and work conducted on archaeological sites.

The Ontario Heritage Act regulations define what the Ministry of Culture has identified as key archaeology terms:

"archaeological fieldwork" means any activity carried out on, above or under land or water for the purpose of obtaining and documenting data, recovering artifacts and remains or altering an archaeological site and includes monitoring, assessing, exploring, surveying, recovering and excavating;

"artifact" means any object, material or substance that is made, modified, used, deposited or affected by human action and is of cultural heritage value or interest;

"archaeological site" means any property that contains an artifact or any other physical evidence of past human use or activity that is of cultural heritage value or interest, and

"marine archaeological site" means an archaeological site that is fully or partially submerged or that lies below or partially-below the high water-mark of any body of water."

The conservation of archaeological sites and data has been an established activity in the Province of Ontario since the 1970s. The former municipalities that now comprise the amalgamated City of Hamilton initiated a variety of actions in response to the inclusion of Archaeological Resource Management (ARM) requirements under the Ontario Heritage Act, the Planning Act, and the Environmental Assessment Act. In 1996 the former Regional Municipality of Hamilton-Wentworth entered into a Memorandum of Understanding with the Province, including OMC, assuming responsibilities that included managing archaeology within the development process. OMC retained, as it does today, the authority of licensing archaeologists, reviewing archaeological work carried out, and maintaining an inventory of registered archaeological sites.

Archaeological Site Registration and Data

When archaeologists register a previously unknown or unregistered site, the OMC provides a unique index value known as a Borden number, and relevant data are recorded on site registration forms. This information includes details on site name (if given), location, type, culture, status and the nature of work conducted on it, location of any records linked with the work, and the identity of researchers who participated in this work. These data are then entered into the OASDB and the OMC Geographic Information System (GIS).

The Ministry has provided information from the OASDB on all registered archaeological sites within the City of Hamilton to the City's Heritage Staff, current to January, 2004. The sites contained in this database form two broad classes:

- those which remain largely in situ, and
- those which are no longer present in situ, but have been fully or partially excavated by archaeologists or otherwise removed.

Owing to the sensitive nature of archaeological sites, their exact spatial location is made available only to qualified specialists, researchers or vested parties. This seeks to protect the resource from unnecessary and harmful impacts such as illegal looting activities. However, general locational information is provided by the Borden numbering system.

The Borden system comprises basic mapping units measuring 10 minutes longitude (approximately14 kilometres) by 10 minutes latitude (approximately 19 kilometres), within a national index system measuring two degrees latitude by four degrees longitude. The City of Hamilton is encompassed by all or parts of 12 Borden Blocks (Figure 1). Each unit is defined by a sequence of four upper and lower case letters denoting the location of the block, and a sequential number assigned to the site within that block (for example AhHa-3 is the 3rd archaeological site registered within the AhHa mapping unit) (Figure 2).

Conventions for naming sites are not fixed. Historic sites are often named after the families, groups, or events with which they are associated or the original recipients of the land patents from the Crown. Native sites have no nomenclature guidelines, and so site names can be arbitrarily chosen.

Archaeological Chronology

Archaeology within Hamilton encompasses a history and prehistory (before written records and Euro-Canadian settlement) of approximately 12,000 years. The region was settled after the retreat of the Wisconsinan glaciation about 14,000 years before present. Prehistoric Native settlement in the Hamilton area starts with Paleo-Indian and Early Archaic Cultures (12,000-7,000 BP: see Table 1). The archaeological remains of these cultures are usually smaller, ephemeral scatters of lithic (stone) tools, and the flakes resulting from their manufacture and use. Because of the age of these sites, organic materials such as wood, bone, and shell are rarely found, and when recovered are fragmentary. The size of these sites reflects the sparse regional population and relatively brief occupations by small families at any given site. Less frequently, large sites representing repeated occupations and/or temporary gatherings of several family or subsistence groups can be found.

The location, density, size and seasonality of sites provide information on settlement patterns at a regional scale, while artifact analysis allows interpretation of activities occurring at individual sites. The general understanding of this settlement period is that small Paleo-Indian family groups initially ranged widely across southern Ontario, while later group sizes increased and movement lessened to some degree, a pattern which continued into the Early Archaic. Long distance trade relationships are evident even in these earliest settlers.

From 7,000 to 3,000 BP the Middle and Late Archaic population sizes increased, even more substantially in the following Woodland period (3,000-500 BP). In the Woodland period, settlement was typified by larger Native villages interspersed with seasonal cabin and hunting sites. As the sites are not as old, more organic material is is preserved and recovered in the form of bone, wood, and vegetation, along with lithics. Large sites (> 1 ha) become more frequent, indicating a trend to more sedentary settlements with evidence of more complex societies over time. Significant regional exchanges of social behaviour (like burial practices), technology (such as pottery), and materials (with Gulf Coast shells and Lake Superior copper in southern Ontario) continue. Horticulture, the cultivation of plants, is established during the Woodland period, giving rise to substantial villages. These often covered several hectares and comprised of several concurrently occupied longhouses up to 100 metres in length.

Historic Native occupation continued during the early Euro-Canadian settlement of Hamilton. Economies changed to large-scale fur-trapping and trading industries. Native population sizes dropped drastically due to illnesses contracted through contact with Europeans, and strategic alliances with different European powers resulted in significant displacements. late 1700s and early 1800s, with property surveys and large-scale colonization by Euro-Canadian settlers, Native populations in Southern Ontario were largely supplanted and localized to Indian Reservations, with their record on the landscape greatly diminished and modified. They retained some patterns of their traditional lifeways and toolkits, but were now largely sedentary, primarily relying on their adaptation of European technology to support this imposed settlement pattern.

After the early phase of colonization and trade, Euro-Canadian settlement took the form of rural farmsteads and hamlets based on an initial resource extraction economy (e.g. timber-clearing and sawmills), followed by an agricultural industry as the main economic strategy. Rapid Euro-Canadian population growth and aggregation of rural services resulted in the rise and growth of towns, cities, and transportation routes. Although there is no set boundary between the definition of "historical archaeology" and modern culture, it is generally accepted that this lies between 50 and 100 years before the present day.

Most terrestrial archaeological resources in Ontario generally occur within the first metre of soil below the ground surface, and Hamilton is no exception. The majority of artifacts are recovered from the topsoil or cultivated portion of the soil where impacted by agricultural activities. Archaeology conducted to date in Hamilton is primarily terrestrial, either as a product of research and amateur archaeology, or as a result of the investigations required to satisfy planning and development approvals.

Aside from terrestrial archaeology Hamilton also has karst (cave) and underwater archaeological resources, although neither of these types of archaeology has been extensively researched yet. These topics are not discussed further in this volume.

Types of Archaeological Work

The three key types of archaeological work that are carried out in the City of Hamilton are:

- academic research;
- avocational archaeology; and
- consulting archaeology or Archaeological Resource Management (ARM).

Research is often conducted by academic archaeologists and students affiliated with educational or governmental institutions, although this forms only a small portion of the archaeological work carried out within the City. Avocational archaeology refers to private work carried out by "amateur" archaeologists, although many of these individuals or groups have extensive experience in carrying out various types of archaeological activities. This is also the oldest tradition of archaeology carried out in the area, as accounts of such amateur research in the 1800s attest. Such research by individuals or groups continues to present day. Because this category of archaeology is less formally administered, it is difficult to quantify the amount carried out, but it entails a significant volume of archaeological survey, if not excavation.

Consulting archaeology, or ARM, comprises the bulk of archaeology carried out in the City. It consists of archaeological survey, testing and excavation in advance of, and in concert with, land and infrastructure development in Hamilton. This work has been organized or structured into four stages of archaeological assessment and are described in further detail below. The scope of archaeological work that derives from requirements or direction under the Planning Act and the Provincial Policy Statement includes Official Plan Amendments, subdivisions, zoning changes, severances, consents, and site-plans. Other projects and undertakings including roadwork, utility-corridors, bridges, water and sewage, pipelines, and other infrastructure, are administered through the Environmental Assessment Act, and associated Class Environmental Assessment regulations.

Archaeological Assessment Stages

In 1993 the Ministry of Culture defined a set of criteria for conducting and reporting on ARM called the Archaeological Assessment Technical Guidelines. These define stages of archaeological work required in a land development context. They proceed sequentially, although actual work contracts often bundle these stages for expediency.

Stage 1: archaeological overview/background study is background work conducted prior to and/or in association with an archaeological survey. This is carried out to determine what archaeological potential and identified resources a subject property or project have, and where and what methodology will be used to assess the potential and resources. This is generally a research stage, although a property inspection may be carried out to confirm its existing physical attributes, a "ground-truthing" that confirms the recorded descriptions of the property. If this background work concludes that a study area retains potential for archaeological resources, further work in the form of Stage 2 work will be recommended.

Stage 2: field assessment consists of a physical archaeological survey of the property or project area by field archaeologists. In terrestrial archaeology this primarily takes two forms: visual inspection and shovel-testing. Visual assessment is typically carried out at 5 or 10 metre intervals on the surface of ploughed and weathered fields, with the soil-surface being visually scanned for archaeological material. Where some or all of the project area cannot be ploughed/disked/harrowed in preparation for visual assessment, shovel-testing at 5 or 10 metre intervals is carried out.

Shovel-testing consists of digging holes with a radius of approximately 30 centimetres to the bottom of the topsoil, screening the soil removed through 6 millimetre wire mesh to recover artifacts. Occasionally, a survey may be conducted through other means, such as the mechanical removal of fill capping buried soil horizons and inspection of the exposed surface to determine whether archaeological material remains. This will usually be permitted by OMC in areas of existing urban or industrial development, where archaeological potential is recognized within a context of prior impact. Where archaeological resources have been identified through assessment, they are evaluated for their level of significance. If warranted, further work in the form of test excavation is recommended.

Stage 3: archaeological site documentation is commonly referred to as the test excavation of an archaeological site. The goal of this stage is to determine the boundaries of an archaeological site, and to further evaluate the significance of the site. This is accomplished through the mapping of artifacts on the ground surface with sites in cultivated fields, and conducting limited but controlled archaeological testing, typified by the excavation of single one-metre squares on an established grid, at an interval of between 5 and 20 metres. Based on the interpretation of data recovered from the Stage 3 field work, including site size, density, and culture based on artifact analysis, more intensive excavation of the site may be recommended if it is of sufficient significance.

Stage 4: mitigation determines a means by which a significant archaeological site is to be managed within the development context. Two OMC-directed options are available at this stage, namely the complete controlled excavation of the archaeological site, or the preservation of the entire site through adoption of a conservation strategy. When excavation is chosen, the methodology is determined by the site type, as defined by prior archaeological work. With the conservation strategy, the site boundaries as defined by the Stage 3 work will be buffered, and a set of physical and planning protection mechanisms put in place to ensure the conservation of the site both during development, which may surround the site, and after the original development phase. The long-term future of the site is protected by the use of planning mechanisms to prevent detrimental impacts on the resource, and through monitoring to maintain the site's integrity.

Site Significance

The determination of a site's significance is based on a variety of factors, including the:

- Integrity or degree of disturbance at a site;
- Rarity or representativeness of a site;
- Productivity of a site to yield information;
- Age of a site;
- Potential of a site to include human remains;
- Association of the site with a location or culture:
- Community interest in or association with a site; and
- Historical association of a site with an event/person/group.

Within the context of ARM, an archaeological consultant reports to the OMC on work carried out to date at the end of a project phase. This will include recommendations either that further work is required, or that no further archaeological concerns remain. The OMC may then accept or reject these recommendations, in whole or in part. Once the OMC has accepted recommendations from a consultant that no further archaeological concerns remain with a project, they will then 'sign-off' on these concerns in correspondence with the City of Hamilton.

While archaeological work sometimes identifies burials, these finds fall under the administration of the Cemeteries Act, as managed by the Cemeteries Branch of the Ministry of Consumer and Business Services.

Archaeology Management Plan

Following municipal amalgamation on January 1, 2001, the City of Hamilton, initiated a co-ordinated effort to manage archaeology within its municipal boundaries. Previously, the Region of Hamilton-Wentworth coordinated and managed archaeology within the former municipalities of Ancaster, Dundas, Flamborough, Glanbrook, Hamilton, and Stoney Creek through a Memorandum of Understanding with the Province (including the Ministry of Culture) in 1996, that became effective in July, 1998.

Work on the City's Archaeology Management Plan (AMP) started in 2003 as an in-house project, with an estimated completion date of 2006. The AMP goal is to appropriately administer archaeological resources through a variety of Planning Act development processes established by the City. The AMP will consist of policies and protocols that will function as both a freestanding management plan, and be integrated into the City's Official Plan policies.

Hamilton's Inventory of Archaeological Sites

As discussed previously, precise locational information on archaeological sites is sensitive information, with distribution restricted under the terms of the data-sharing agreement signed between the Region of Hamilton-Wentworth and Ministry of Culture in 1996, and renewed between the City of Hamilton and Ministry of Culture in 2002. As a result, the geospatial precision for the sites in the following inventory has been restricted to Borden Blocks.

The preparation of any cultural heritage inventory is a recognized, standard practice in a sound heritage management strategy. A heritage inventory is a simple and effective way of taking stock or otherwise accounting for the various types of archaeological sites that may exist within any defined geographical area. The City of Hamilton's archaeological inventory lists archaeological sites that have been registered with the Province of Ontario. This volume, Hamilton's Heritage, Volume 4: Inventory of Registered Archaeological Sites is a companion volume to four other compilations of heritage data, as follows:

- Hamilton's Heritage, Volume 1, contains a listing of all properties designated Parts IV and V under the Ontario Heritage Act.
- Hamilton's Heritage, Volume 2, lists all heritage properties that have been identified as buildings of architectural and/or historical interest.

- Hamilton's Heritage, Volume 3 lists all heritage properties identified by the Government of Canada in the Canadian Inventory of Historic Building.
- Hamilton's Heritage, Volume 5 details the reasons for designation of all heritage properties designated under Part IV of the Ontario Heritage Act.

There will be additions to the inventory with ongoing survey work. The inventory is not to be considered a fixed or complete list. It will be reviewed and updated on a regular basis to include additional archaeological sites and to document or note any that may have been destroyed.

The inventory is a first step and the basic building block of a properly managed municipal heritage conservation strategy. The inventory assists in making informed decisions, enhances educational initiatives and promotes knowledge and awareness of the special characteristics of a community. An inventory provides an essential base for consistent and coherent management of a municipality's archaeological heritage.

Archaeological resources are found throughout the City in urban, suburban, and rural areas. These features are considered of heritage value to the community in which they are immediately located, and in a wider context within the province or the nation.

The list is used internally by City staff to review planning and development applications and the disposition of City owned property. Where appropriate, staff of the Heritage and Urban Design group may provide further detailed comments on the heritage attributes of an archaeological site.

City Heritage Staff can be consulted on archaeology. The Ontario Ministry of Culture must be contacted when archaeological resources are unexpectedly encountered by development projects (519-675-6898, fax 519-675-7777). If human remains are discovered the Cemeteries Branch of the Ministry of Consumer and Business Services should be contacted (416-326-8392).

Format of the list

The following listing of archaeological sites contains only basic and unedited information from the Ministry of Culture Ontario Archaeological Sites Database, namely a Borden number, and limited information on site name, site type and site culture. The inclusion of question marks (?) ascribed to site type of cultural affinities represent "best estimates" based on the artifacts recovered. Appendix A includes definitions of the site types referred to in the inventory.

These data are in an electronic database that will eventually contain other essential site information, but currently is provided by the Ministry of Culture on a case-by-case basis. Each of the following data entries is typically supported by a hard-copy file and/or research report on file at the Ministry of Culture.
